

Rapunzel and the Policeman

By 4B Huo Qing Ya

Once upon a time, a bad queen put a princess in a castle. Her name was Rapunzel. One day, Rapunzel saw a policeman and opened the door.

'I'm here to rescue you,' said the policeman.

'Ugh! Your socks are very smelly!' said Rapunzel. 'How often do you change them?'

'Once a month,' replied the policeman.

'You ought to change your socks every day. Come back when your socks don't stink,' said Rapunzel.

'OK! I am going to change my socks every day,' said the policeman.

The next week, the policeman came to the castle again with a pleasant smell.

'Very good,' said Rapunzel. 'But your face is dirty. How often do you wash your face?'

'Twice a week,' replied the policeman.

'You ought to wash your face twice a day,' said Rapunzel.

The policeman listened to Rapunzel's advice, 'OK! I am going to wash my face every day.'

The next week, the policeman came to the castle once again with a nice and clean face.

'That's better,' said Rapunzel.

'Let's go out of the castle,' said the policeman.

In the end, the policeman saved Rapunzel. They then caught the bad queen.

